

I have learned that Chewy.com, a rapidly growing online company that sells all sorts of items related to pets, is likely the company considering the intersection of I-94 and County K in northern Racine County for a distribution center. The site was the subject of a recent closed door meeting of local and Racine County officials amid rumors that the site was connected to the proposed Foxconn development. The Chewy.com deal is not finalized and may not materialize but Chewy evidently is the large retailer interested in the site. If built, the distribution center would rival the size of the Amazon facility in Kenosha County.

Mark Belling

July 13, 2017