

Rumors continue to swirl on the Internet that the Rolling Stones will appear at Miller Park in June. A source in a position to know is adamant that this is not true. It is possible there will be a Stones concert at a different venue in the area. The band is about to launch a major promotion for the re-release of its legendary Sticky Fingers album and a billboard campaign tied to this is leading to speculation of a short tour this summer. A music industry source tells me something will materialize by about March 18, one way or another.

Bottom line: No Stones at Miller Park, possible Stones elsewhere.
